The discovery of the graves at the site of the St. Barnabas Manse, has prompted me to do a little research in our records at the museum. We have some notes by the late Mr. Mort Fulton, in our files, which are a constant source of information. Mr. Fulton was an early resident of Medicine Hat, Alberta, having arrived in 1901. He carried on a business of General Contracting and was responsible for construction of some of the older homes and buildings in the city. In his notes on early history of the city, I read this regarding 'First Cemeteries.'

The first cemetery was located near where Ogilvie Flour Mills now stands. The next cemetery was near St. Barnabas Church, moved further up the hill later. The first burial service was for a surveyor who died of fever early in 1883. He does not mention any dates as to when the cemetery was in use at St. Barnabas Church, but in other references, Reverend Wellington Bridgman, (the first Methodist minister in Medicine Hat in 1883) states that the fever, (probably a type of flu) struck the town and he performed eleven funerals that year, deaths caused by the fever. He does not, however, state where the burials were made but we assume they were in the first cemetery located near Ogilvie Flour Mills in 1883.

Kin Coulee Cemetery, Medicine Hat, Alberta.

This cemetery was used by St. Patrick's Catholic Church and St. Barnabas Anglican Church known as the Church of England. The first person buried in the Church of England section was Colin McKay who died March 01, 1884.

The last person buried was George Culley on November 29, 1922. The ashes of Marie Burden Ridpath were interred October 15, 1947.

The first person buried in the Catholic section was Mary Elizabeth Watson who died January 16, 1889. The last person buried in the Catholic section was John Hopitzan who died January 09, 1919.

Information was gathered from church records and the grave markers. C, depicts Catholic section.
